Fire is a deryish. I saw him dance—Bending and twisting and leaping high Against a curtain of midnight sky. His hair was yellow, his body red And he waved grey tatters about his head; While the hissing thud of his naked feet Beat like a pulse in the yillage street.

Fire is a dervish. I saw him dance A wild death dance in the purple night;
Bed and yellow and dingy white, Twirling and swaying from fast to slow,
To heavy heel and tired tip-toe,
To fitful gusts of difficult breath,
To a ruddy heap and then to death.

COUNTY OF OXFORD, 88.

Board of County Commissioners, in vacation, November 15, 1924.

UPON the foregoing petition, satisfactory evidence having been received that the petitioners are responsible, and that inquiry into the merits of their application is expedient, IT is Ordered, that the County Commissioners meet at the Office of the Selectmen of Hiram, November 28th next, at ten of the clock A. M., and thence proceed to view the routes mentioned in said petition; immediately after which view a hearing of the parties and their witnesses will be had at some convenient place in the vicinity, and such other measures taken in the premises as the Commissioners shall judge proper. And it is further Ordered, that notice of the time, place and purpose of the Commissioners' meeting aforesaid be given to all persons and corporations interested, by causing attested copies of said petition, and of this order thereon, to be served upon the Clerk of the town of Hiram and also posted up in two public places in said town, and published one week in the Oxford Democrat, a newspaper printed at Paris, in said County of Oxford, the said publication and each of the other notices, to be made, served and posted at least seven days before said time of meeting, to the end that all persons and corporations may then and there appear and shew cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

The bookshelves were put in at the original height of the drawers, to accommodate scrap books, specimen books, etc., for which a shelf of good height was needed. The depth of the shelf lent itself most willingly to the papers and magazines, dear to the heart of a boy, for they can be piled up without pro-jecting beyond the edge of the case, which is not possible on bookshelves having the usual shelf depth. And the low-er drawer has been a boon to the house-wife, for it holds untold treasure—the paraphernalia for finishing pictures, the radio that has been taken apart, and the other odds and ends, which used to clut-ter up the house and which a normal boy must have.

Speaking of Curtains. A clever woman once made the remark that she could always tell a good housekeeper by the way she hung her curtains Perhaps that is going too far; but one certainly can tell how much originality the homemaker has by the way she solves her curtain problems. Sometimes curtaining the windows means much more than appears from the outside, and this, in more ways of speaking than one; for the homemaker some-times has a very subtle reason for the ngenious way she has arranged, selected or made her curtains and hangings. Per-haps it is coaxing the sunlight into a dark apartment; or covering the window so as to exclude an unsightly areaway or alley; for such things do exist, as all city dwellers can testify, in spite of the civic spirit we would like to think all citizens possess.

So the woman who has a real problem to work out, when she selects her cur-tains, and solves it, surely has passed the flual examination of her home-making ability. . One capable woman shut out an impos ible ugly view, from the window at one end of her living room, by using burlap drawn across the entire window. Threads were drawn out for about five inches, then a space of three inches was left and the threads drawn again, alternating in this way until the correct length was secured; the last series of drawn threads forming a fringe for the bottom of the hanging. This curtain was drawn across the window, and the light filtered in, while the view of an unsightly lot across the way was com pletely hidden. The burlap was a soft blue, which blended in perfectly with the rest of the furnishings.

Another happy arrangement for a one-window dining room, where all the day-light possible was coaxed in to cheer the diners, was obtained by a glass curtain of yellow voile and filet lace. The curtain consisted of alternate strips of voile and filet insertion, shaped into points, and each point finished with a tassel. These strips were graduated so that the shortest hung slightly below the rod in the center of the window. The side bangings were of a deep yellow. During the day every ray of light possible was beckoned into the room. In the evening the deeper yellow side hangings could

A narrow window in a kitchen was made attractive in this way: the dark shade was entirely removed, and the upper sash of the window had a curtain of sash of the window had a curtain of close-meshed sorim, with a casing and heading top and bottom. This was put on like a door curtain—over a rod, top and bottom, so that it was held taut. The fuliness of this upper curtain made for privacy, and the white, sbadeless window let in every ray of light. The lower part of the sash also had a white, scrim curtain, but this was cut in two, and finished with a ruffle of red checked gingham, with hold-backs of the pinggingham, with hold-backs of the ging-ham. The whole effect was most charming in this red and white kitchen, and it solved the problem of securing as much light as possible.

An unusual arrangement for a bathroom was secured in this way: A good quality of English chintz was selected; the old, dirty white shade was removed. and a shade of chintz was made and tacked on the roller; with this a straight curtain of heavy scrim, with a border of the chintz to match the shade, was used for the lower sash. This was suspended from a rod fastened on either side of the frame. In this way it did not interfere with raising and lowering the window, and offered the privacy that is not possible when a sash curtain is fastened to the lower sash. Gingham could be substituted for the chints with equally good effect. And, best of all, the entire windows. effect. And, best of all, the entire window arrangements of both the kitchen and bathroom described can be given frequent tubbings, and so kept fresh and clean. Our New England grandmothers often had shades of muslin, which were laundered spring and fall, at the semiannual house cleaning; so the idea is not a new one, but the fabrice now used give a most delightful effect, and can be most delightful effect, and can be made to conform to any color scheme.

Surely there is no more satisfying way for a woman to express some of her creative ability than to make her win-tive quality of a room, and at the same time permit the sunlight to enter. Making Popcorn Pop. Popcorn pops because it contains certain percentage of moisture, which is turned into steam, when the corn is put
